

PAYS FOR FUNERAL, THEN HANGS SELF AS HIS WIFE DID

West New York Man Asked
Undertaker to Fill All Carriages He Hired.

When Gustav Ising's wife committed suicide by hanging herself in her home at No. 66 Palisade avenue, West New York, six months ago, Gustav went to William Necker, an undertaker, of No. 31 Bergeline avenue, West Hoboken, and gave minute directions for the funeral. Then, remarking that he was sixty-four years old and did not expect to live long, he arranged for his own funeral, agreeing to pay $200 for specified services.

Necker, in opening his mail to-day, found a letter from Ising, who, since his wife's death, had been living alone in the Palisade avenue residence. The letter, dated yesterday, read:

"Dear Sir—Kindly call at my home for my body, as I will have committed suicide by that time you reach there. If any of my folks want to come to my funeral they may do so, as you know I arranged for a number of coaches. If they don't care to come will you kindly send as many of your employees as you can and anybody around the neighborhood of your establishment to fill the coaches, as I do not want my funeral to be any smaller than I arranged for."

Inclosed find check for $200 to cover my funeral expenses as per agreement, also a bankbook on the Hudson Bank for $250. Yours Near Death, GUSTAV ISING.

Ising made all speed to the home of Ising. He found the old man dead, hanging by the neck from a bedpost in his room. He had been dead about six hours.

The careful suicide had no children, but a number of distant relatives live around West Hoboken and West New York. Mr. Necker says if a sufficient number of these relatives to bill the coaches do not attend the funeral he will supply mourners in compliance with Ising's wishes.

However, Mr. Necker believes there will be quite a number of relatives on hand. The bankbook shows a balance of $744 and Ising is believed to have left other property. He was in business in West New York for many years and had retired only a short time when his wife took her life and left him alone in the world.

VETO BILL MAKES GAINS.

King May Not Have to Create Any New Peers to Pass Measure.

LONDON, July 27.—It is becoming increasingly evident that the "idle hawks" will not be able to "deliver the goods," or in other words to poll their peers to anything like the extent claimed and the Government will not be forced to create a large number of peers if any, in order to carry the Veto Bill.

The effect of last night's rally at the dinner given in honor of the Earl of Halsbury, leader of the insurgent Lords, has been to send the whole company of moderates scurrying into the ranks of Lord Lansdowne's adherents who this afternoon totalled in the neighborhood of 300. The Government is going to give the Unionists plenty of time in which to compose their differences. Premier Asquith, anxious as his opponents to avoid swamping the House with new names, will not force a crisis so long as members are tending in that direction. There are even rumors of an early adjournment of Parliament before final action on the Veto Bill and a session in the autumn by which it is thought that the tension may be entirely abated.

Miss Higgins a Bride.
OLEAN, N. Y., July 27.—Miss Josephine Higgins, daughter of the late Gov. Frank W. Higgins, was married yesterday in St. Stephen's Church to Emile Lucien Hovelaque, Inspector-General of Public Instruction in France. Miss Elizabeth Aiken of Rochester, a niece of Mrs. H. Harrington of New York, was maid of honor. Miss Higgins met M. Hovelaque in Egypt two years ago.

HAIRDRESSING
SHAMPOOING
MASSAGING
MANICURING
HAIR WEAVING
TAUGHT BY Special Teachers
IN Separate Class Rooms
IN A Short Time

TWO REAL CRUSOES ASQUITH ADMITS GRAVITY OF THE LONG ISLAND BAY MOROCCAN SNARL

Situation, He Says, Will Become Anxious for England Unless Solution Is Found.

LONDON, July 27.—Premier Asquith made a statement in the House of Commons to-day on the subject of Morocco which fully bore out the description of the situation as one of real anxiety. The position, the Premier said, had reached a point at which it was bound to become difficult and harassing unless a solution was found.

Mr. Asquith said that Great Britain was not a party to the conversations proceeding between France and Germany, but earnestly and sincerely desired to see them result in an arrangement honorable and satisfactory to all parties. He earnestly appealed to the House not to seek to enter into the details of the situation at the present moment.

The Premier said that the Government had thought it right from the beginning to make it clear that failing a satisfactory settlement, Great Britain must become an active party to a discussion of the situation.

The promised statement of Sir Edward Grey, Foreign Secretary, will be made to-morrow evening, with the Kenneth interest, for the Secretary of Foreign Affairs is expected to appeal for the united support of all parties to hold up the hands of the Government in the defense of what they concede to be Great Britain's best interests.

PARIS, July 27.—The critical deadlock between France and Germany continues, but France expects that a way will be found for a peaceful solution. To this end she is prepared to go to the limits of conciliation, but cannot agree either to evacuate Morocco or hand over huge blocks of African territory merely in return for Germany's reiterated assurance that France will not be bothered in the future in Morocco.

The International League advocates that the real danger of the situation rests in the nations offending

Germany's pride by driving her into a corner from which she might strike in anger.

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

The Marin to-day devotes an article to what it styles "The German Bluff." It claims that one in Germany would risk of doing the risk of a struggle against the triple entente. The paper adds: "The Agadir incident demonstrates that Emperor William's efforts to obtain better relations with Great Britain were pure hypocrisy. The real aim was to separate England and France."

</